The Founder Strikes Back; Upgrading to OW

Raising Rating

INVESTMENT SUMMARY:

Leadership clarity strengthens the investment case. BETR has been engaged in an intense contest with former CEO and founder Vishal Garg to determine whether Mr. Garg's recent termination would be unwound or reconfirmed (see Governance Dispute Coming to a Head, 9/3/26). On 9/30, the Garg Group announced that it had secured written consents representing over 51% of BETR's voting shares, positioning Mr. Garg to return to an operating role (pending validation by a Third-Party Election Inspector and BETR's formal acceptance of the consents). As discussed in our recent downgrade, while concerns around Mr. Garg's management style remain, we continue to believe he represents a critical nexus of BETR's strategic vision, key business relationships, and sales execution. Given the stock fell ~37% the day after the announcement (August 4) and has subsequently fallen further (down ~60% since August 4, vs. the S&P 500 up ~1% over the same time period), the price action suggests that investors also viewed Mr. Garg's departure as a material risk to the company. In this context, we believe Mr. Garg's prospective return and the associated leadership changes (see below) could restore greater strategic continuity and begin to alleviate the governance uncertainty that informed our prior downgrade. Accordingly, we upgrade BETR to OW (from N), while recognizing that formal acceptance of the consents and an orderly transition remain outstanding.

@danielsethlewis forcibly overruled the CFO and paid it out to himself. Jammed it through payroll with the help of an "esteemed" board member who commanded the CFO to make the payment, in contravention with Better's own corporate charter and compensation guidelines. I found out Show more

Shorts are long @danielsethlewiss and his path to zero. We will get him out. Maybe he's being paid by the shorts to prolong this. Let's see what happens when he's finally booted out.
